Mr. Kay focuses his practice on civil rights and governmental liability, business and commercial law, and appellate law, with a concentration on civil litigation defense. He represents insurance companies/risk pools and their insureds with respect to both first and third-party claims, including employment discrimination, professional liability, municipal liability, automobile negligence claims, general commercial matters, bad faith claims, uninsured/underinsured claims, products liability, wrongful death claims, commercial premises liability claims, and property and casualty claims. He also has significant experience counseling clients in insurance coverage matters, including the securing of declaratory judgments on policy interpretations.

Developed during his years of experience working with insurance companies, Jeff has the expertise and ability, often in conjunction with an insurance company's Special Investigations Unit (SIU), to handle the investigation and coverage analysis of suspicious/fraudulent insurance claims, including complex fire and homeowners loss claims. By conducting extensive fact investigations in an effort to take a very aggressive stance against all fraudulent claims, including taking examinations under oath (EUOs), he provides assistance to insurers throughout the claims process and beyond. Jeff has the trial experience needed to defend and litigate every aspect of first and third-party fraudulent claims in mediations, arbitrations, and trials in state and federal courts.

Jeff has successfully handled cases before state and federal administrative agencies, with a focus on representing clients before the Equal Opportunity Employment Commission (EEOC) and the Ohio Civil Rights Commission (OCRC.) Before joining MRR, he was employed by the OCRC and was primarily responsible for drafting the Cleveland Regional Office's Recommendation – for submission to the OCRC – which set forth the Cleveland Regional Office's legal basis for its determination on employee discrimination.

He advises business owners and entrepreneurs on capital investments, as he is an entrepreneur and investor himself. Jeff founded Jacobs III Capital Holdings, LLC, a creative and cutting-edge investment company, in 2003 and since then it has invested in several successful business ventures, including residential real estate development.

He has achieved success on behalf of his clients before state and federal appellate courts, having successfully argued cases before most of the Ohio Appellate Circuit Courts.
